

Jon Driver

Jon Driver grew up in England and moved to Canada as a PhD student at University of Calgary. He has taught and researched archaeology at Simon Fraser University since 1982, where he also served as dean of graduate studies and vice-president academic and provost from 2000 to 2016. He is currently the president of the Western Canadian Universities Marine Sciences Society. He has undertaken archaeological research in England, Canada and the USA, focusing on the adaptation of people to their environment.